ANTECEDENTES

With increasingly complex global challenges such as climate change and public health pandemics, it has become incumbent on the international community to cultivate analytical practitioners who, based on a solid footing in international law, can think long-term and act strategically in concert with diverse stakeholders. The UNITAR Fellowship and the Visitors Programme enable select participants to take semester-long courses on international law and its sub-domains at one of the most prestigious law schools in New York.

CONTENIDO Y ESTRUCTURA

Depending on courses selected, participants can develop expertise on various areas of international law relevant to their work at the United Nations, inter alia: human rights law, environmental law and maritime law, international commercial arbitration, intellectual property law, humanitarian law, regional governance and foreign direct investment.

METODOLOGÍA

Participants can indicate their preferred choice of school and, once accepted, can take up to two courses at either school during the spring semester, which runs from January to April 2012. In addition to attending classes, participants must complete readings and other assignments as required by course instructors. Most law courses use Socratic method, in which instructors randomly call upon students for answers. Please visit <http://www.law.columbia.edu> or <http://www.law.nyu.edu> for course listing and syllabus.

(Registration is closed for 2012.)
