CONTEXTE

As the aviation industry continues to grow at an accelerating rate worldwide, there is an increased need for airports in developing countries to reexamine and improve their practices in terms of operations, economics, management, safety and security. Each year, the Airports Council International hosts a number of conferences and seminars focused on enhancing airport services and security in developing nations, and CIFAL Atlanta has been a long-time partner of ACI in providing these programs. The aim of this seminar is to assist airport officials in developing countries in achieving meaningful and sustainable results in emergency planning via the event and learning objectives highlighted below.

CONTENU ET STRUCTURE

The seminar consists of the following six sessions:

The six disciplines of customer experience:
