BACKGROUND

Women professionals in the early stages of their careers are increasingly navigating complex professional environments shaped by rapid global change, evolving leadership expectations, and growing uncertainty across political, social, and institutional contexts. At this stage of their careers, many women are balancing increasing professional responsibility with important personal and professional questions related to purpose, direction, sustainability, and identity.

For many, the years following entry into the workforce can represent a period of reassessment and transition. Women may begin questioning whether their current professional trajectory aligns with their values and long-term aspirations, while simultaneously navigating pressures related to career progression, mobility, visibility, and expectations within demanding institutional environments. International and mission-driven careers can offer meaningful opportunities for impact, while also presenting challenges related to mobility, visibility, sustainability, and balancing personal and professional priorities. At the same time, women may continue to encounter barriers related to confidence, access to leadership networks, and navigating institutional environments that do not always reflect inclusive leadership models.

A condensed version of the Women's Leadership for Peace Programme, this course responds to this need through an intensive one-week leadership training in Geneva designed for women professionals with approximately 4 to 7 years of experience. The programme provides reflective and collaborative learning environment where participants can explore authentic leadership, engage with experienced women leaders, and strengthen their ability to lead effectively in complex and rapidly changing contexts.

Grounded in the values of inclusive leadership, dialogue, and peace, the programme recognizes that the meaningful representation of women across sectors linked to peace and security contributes to more inclusive and resilient institutions and communities. It aims to support participants in advancing this contribution through greater self-awareness, personal and professional clarity, and leadership confidence.

LEARNING OBJECTIVES

By the end of the course, participants will:

- Strengthen self-awareness and identify/reconnect with passions, motivations, and leadership aspirations;
- Reflect critically on career direction, evolving priorities, and alignment between professional pathways and personal values;
- Develop a clearer understanding of their individual leadership style;

- Build confidence in navigating professional transitions, uncertainty, and changing personal and professional priorities;
- Enhance capacity to lead effectively in situations of uncertainty and complexity;
- Engage with women leaders from different sectors and contexts;
- Build meaningful peer networks and communities of support across regions and professional background;
- Develop an individual leadership action plan for the next stage of their professional journey.

CONTENT AND STRUCTURE

The programme is organised around three interconnected tracks :

Track 1: Personal Leadership

The first track focuses on leadership identity, self-awareness, and personal reflection. Participants are encouraged to reflect on their professional journey to date and examine the values, motivations, and experiences that shape how they lead. The track explores themes related to confidence, authenticity, leadership presence, wellbeing, and defining success in ways that are aligned with individual priorities and aspirations. It also creates space for participants to reflect on questions that often emerge during this stage of professional life, including reassessing career direction, navigating competing personal and professional expectations, and considering how to build a career that remains aligned with evolving values, ambitions, and definitions of impact.

Particular attention is given to the challenges many women experience during this stage of their careers, including navigating uncertainty, balancing ambition with sustainability, and building confidence within demanding professional environments. The track aims to support participants in developing greater clarity regarding their leadership style, strengths, and future direction.

Track 2: Learning from Women Leaders

The second track centres on learning through dialogue and exchange with women leaders from international organisations, diplomacy, civil society, peace and security, social impact, and related sectors. Participants will explore diverse leadership journeys and gain insight into the opportunities and challenges associated with leadership across different professional contexts. This track examines themes such as career progression, resilience, navigating institutional systems, building influence, and leading with integrity in complex environments. Through exposure to a range of leadership experiences and perspectives, participants are encouraged to reflect on their own pathway and expand their understanding of leadership in practice.

Track 3: Leadership in Complexity and Futures Thinking

The third track explores leadership in the context of complexity, uncertainty, and rapid global transformation. Participants will examine how leaders can respond effectively to evolving social, political, technological, and environmental challenges while maintaining clarity, adaptability, and ethical responsibility. The track introduces futures-oriented approaches to leadership and encourages participants to think critically about the emerging trends and systems shaping the future of work, governance, and international cooperation. Participants will reflect on the role of women's leadership in contributing to more inclusive, resilient, and peaceful futures, while strengthening their ability to navigate ambiguity and lead through change.

METHODOLOGY

The programme adopts a participatory and reflective learning approach anchored in dialogue, experiential learning, and peer exchange. The methodology is designed to create a collaborative and supportive environment in which participants can engage critically with leadership approaches while reflecting on their own professional experiences and aspirations.

Through experiential learning, participants will engage in practical based exercises that support their professional and personal growth. UNITAR will employ various pedagogies to enhance learning and behavioural change, with the aim to challenge participants in a safe environment where they can share lessons learned and strengthen their networks and understanding of the world. Through peer-to-peer learning, experience sharing, and activities participants will gain practical skills as well as have the opportunity to reflect on and further develop their own leadership style.

TARGETED AUDIENCE

The programme is designed for self-identifying women professionals with approximately 4 to 7 years of professional experience in the broader sustaining peace ecosystem who are seeking to strengthen their leadership capacity, reflect on their professional trajectory, and prepare for the next stage of their careers. The programme welcomes participants from diverse cultural, professional, and geographic backgrounds who are committed to inclusive leadership and contributing positively to their communities.
