Governments and increasingly other actors such as international and non-governmental organizations use multilateral conferences as a means to achieve important policy objectives. As the number of conferences and meetings has risen considerably over the past twenty years, the number of government officers and other stakeholders involved in conference processes has also increased significantly. While diplomats remain at the center of diplomacy, government officials assigned to line ministries and agencies, as well as staff of intergovernmental organizations and NGOs, are increasingly finding themselves in the role of the multilateral conference delegate.

At the end of the workshop, participants will be able to:

- Demonstrate a condensed but sound knowledge of the historical background and conceptual framework of Multilateralism and Conference Diplomacy;
- Analyze the resolutions issued by different organs of the United Nations;
- Create a United Nations resolution;
- Evaluate the importance of consultations in the process leading from negotiating to adopting United Nations resolutions through a case study.

The course is designed to be interactive and participatory, including various pedagogical tools to enable the participants to function effectively and efficiently in multilateral conferences. The course will be built on four pedagogical pillars: concept learning (lectures and presentations), role-playing (group exercises), experience sharing (roundtable discussions), and exposure to real-world problems and policy choices delegates are confronted with. The workshop will also include a one-hour guided tour of the Palais des Nations, offering participants first-hand insight into the institutional setting and working environment of multilateral diplomacy in Geneva, as a valuable practical complement to the training.

□□□□

This course is primarily open to:

- Members of Permanent Missions accredited to the United Nations Office in Geneva;
- Delegates of Ministries of Foreign Affairs and other government officials;
- Representatives of international, intergovernmental, and non-governmental organizations and Diplomatic academies;
- Professionals from the private sector.
