In the context of the employment crisis, the solidarity economy emerges as a space for the construction of alternative forms of work and production, involving a diversity of social actors. Training and qualification is contributing to the process of the construction of the solidarity economy movement through the constitution of a new collective actor: a network of articulated incubators with strong performance in local spaces.

Consolidate and promote the popular and solidary economy, within the sustainable formation and training; being part of the integration of the demand presented by its actors.
