This foundation course provides an overview of the nexus of World Trade Organization (WTO) law and the underlying economics and political economy of international trade. Set against the context of historical developments in trade regulation, the course offers an introduction to the institutional rules of the WTO as well as a preliminary survey of the principles and basic rules of the international trading system to prepare students for further studies in the area. It also focuses on the legal parameters and evolution of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT) and WTO Agreements while also investigating basic economic and political economy models and key empirical findings. The objective of this course is to introduce participants to the legal, economic, and other conceptual underpinnings and principles of the rule-based multilateral trading system. The course has been designed so as to enable participants to better understand not just the legal, economic, and diplomatic perspectives of trade rules but also their interaction and interrelation. Developing a sophisticated, inter-disciplinary perspective is, therefore, a central goal of this course.

At the end of the course, the participants should be able to:

- Describe the legal, economic and other conceptual underpinnings and principles of the rules-based multilateral trading system;
- Recognize the legal, economic and diplomatic perspectives of trade rules and their interaction; and
- Discuss the case for and against trade liberalisation and international trade rules.

The course consists of the following modules:

- Module 1: History and Evolution of International Trade Regulation: From Mercantilism to the WTO
- Module 2: The Economic Foundations of International Trade
- Module 3: The Economic Analysis of Trade Policies
- Module 4: The WTO System: Institutional Structure and Legal Principles
- Module 5: The WTO System: WTO Agreements and Major Political Controversies in the Trading System

This course is designed specifically for senior and middle-level officials and professionals wishing to deepen their knowledge and understanding of international trade in a flexible and practical way.

A certificate of completion will be issued by UNITAR and WTI to all participants who complete the course-related assignments and assessments successfully.
